Debut Party.

Tuesday evening, between the hours of seven and nine, and from then on into the "wee sma' hours," Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Albers kept open house in honor of their second daughter, Miss Annie Dee McClung. It was a veritable bit of her mother's own Southland, conjured up for the pleasure of this slender Southern maiden. The masses of bright, glowing flowers, gorgeous roses and many-hued chrysanthemums, the ropes of dark green smilax and ivy, with the soft, dreamy music, brought an odorous breath of "the land of flowers." With the becoming and appropriate background formed by the bewildering array of beautiful flowers, the loving remembrances of many friends, Mr. and Mrs. Albers presented their many guests to Miss McClung, assisted by Miss Sara Carhart, of New York; Miss Shook, of Nashville, and last, the oldest daughter of the house, Miss Margaret Cowan McClung, who, with her breezy, affable manners and cordial greeting, gave each and every one a foretaste of the pleasant evening to come. Mrs. Albers wore a beautiful dress of pale violet silk, most becomingly trimmed in pink satin bows and dainty white lace, with yoke and sleeves of this filmy material. Miss Annie Dee's gown was of white silk, with the most exquisite little Parisian overdress of white silk pannes, each flower having a pearl as a center. The overdress was open-work, as was the entire waist, while a fringe of the same pearl-studded pannes outlined the low neck. On seeing her, one was forcibly reminded of a large, pure white pansy, with a sweet, girlish face as the central pearl. Miss Carhart and Miss Shook both wore lovely white gowns, while Miss McClung wore a chenille dotted tulle of the pale green so especially becoming to her dainty blonde beauty. In the library the three other debutantes and their guests received and entertained—Misses Rosannah Rodgers, Mary Louise McMullen, May Douglass, and Misses Nabb and Woolsey. In the dining-room Mesdames H. W. Hall, Jacob Thomas, C. J. McClung, Jonathan Tipton, E. S. McClung and A. P. Lockett also added to the pleasure of the occasion in fulfilling their duties. In this room pink predominated, in the numerous candles placed about the room, in the pretty bows of ribbon tied at intervals along the feathery vines of smilax connecting the chandelier to the corners of the room, in the ices, cakes, etc., everywhere the same coloring, welcome forecast of a young girl's rosy future. The table, which was simply covered by a white cloth and large and small lace mats, was further beautified by a large bowl with bright pink carnations and sweet roses mingled in graceful confusion, while the corners held small vases of the same flowers, and tall pink and white Dresden candelabra with pink candles. Mr. and Mrs. Albers are notably hospitable people and their names and those of their charming daughters are synonymous of much good cheer.

As Thanksgiving draws nigh, bringing its many pleasures and its manifold duties, housekeepers will remember with satisfaction the Market to be held by the ladies of the First Presbyterian church on Gay street. Appropriate dishes and dainties can be had there at small cost, relieving the tired mind of the worry, and the body of the real fatigue that a feasting holiday always brings.

Friday's Cotillion.

Friday night at the ever popular Cotillion club rooms a german was danced, made especially pleasant on account of the number of pretty visiting girls present. Many fresh lovely dresses were noticed, worn by our own home girls as well as the strangers. The german was led by Mr. F. H. McClung.

Mrs. Ralph Walsh and daughter Miss Janie, of Washington, are soon to visit Mrs. E. S. McClung.

November Magazines.

The November number of the Ladies' Home Journal is the best Thanksgiving offering of good articles and good pictures ever presented to its readers. Three features which will appeal to the Southern-bred man and woman are: "The Anecdotal Side of Robert E. Lee," "Those Stately Homes of Old Virginia" and "The Governor's Last Levee," the last by Sara Beaumont Kennedy, of Memphis. The most unique page is entitled, "Why we never Married," giving the whys and wherefores which stood in the way of the matrimonial prospects of seven maids and seven bachelors. Sir Henry Irving gives some valuable hints to those who are ambitious to become students of Shakespeare, and the department contributions are even better than usual.

The chief feature of the November Century is John Morley's "Life of Oliver Cromwell." It is to be continued. Mark Twain describes his "Debut as a Literary Person;" S. Wier Mitchell contributes "The Autobiography of a Quack;" Gustav Kobbé gives us a peep at "Wagner From Behind the Scenes," and the rest of the contents is equally as varied and interesting.

In the November Munsey, Rev. John Jay Lewis writes about the next year's celebration of the Passion Play—the strange medieval institution which has made a Bavarian mountain village famous; Hazen S. Pingree, governor of Michigan, presents his views on a leading public question of the day—"The Municipal Ownership of Street Railways;" Albert Bigelow Paine and Marguerite Tracy each contribute a good newspaper story, and the remainder of the contents is up to the usual Munsey standard.

The contributors to McClure's for November are: Dr. Frederick A. Cook, surgeon of the Belgian Antarctic expedition, who writes entertainingly of his adventures at the South pole; Rudyard Kipling, Shan F. Bullock, William Allen White, Sarah Barnwell Elliott, Helen Watterson Moody, story writers; and George S. Boutwell, H. J. W. Dam, W. A. Fraser, Alexander Hume Ford and Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, who furnish the descriptive articles.

One of the best articles in the November Frank Leslie is the complete story by Stephen Crane entitled "West Pointer and Volunteer." A paper of peculiar interest at this time is contributed by an Englishwoman who was for five years a resident of a little Dutch village in the north of Cape Colony, close to the borders of the Orange Free State. There are the usual number of short stories and sketches and a touching description of "The Old Folks at Home in New England."

Some of the best papers in the November Cosmopolitan are: "The Woman Question," by Olive Schreiner; "The Educational Question," by President Hadly, of Yale University; "In the Engine-Room of a War-Ship," by H. Webster, Commander United States Navy, and "A Transcontinental Roadway," by Julian Hawthorne. There are also several excellent stories.

The Woman's Home Companion is one of the best publications of its kind and the November number is one of the best of the year. The stories, pictures and departments are full of interest—even the advertising pages are works of art.

The December number of the Delinquent is out and is a beauty. Its fashions are always reliable, its departments always well edited, its hints to the home dressmaker and milliner are ever instructive and easy of execution, and its fancy work table always presents the right thing at the right time. This issue is devoted largely to fancy work and cookery suitable for Christmas and will prove a valuable helper to the busy housewife.

All the above are for sale by Monroe Howard, Clinch street.

Rather Rude.

Not long since an attractive young visitor asked me, quite seriously: "What must a girl, and a stranger at that, do when she is left at a card party?" "When she has no escort, do you mean?" "O, no! I was not referring to evening parties. Of course no gentleman would ever be guilty of leaving a girl, deliberately, in the way I mean. But, at afternoon card parties, when the game has been finished, and the maids have begun distributing napkins and table-covers, if two or three of the number should suddenly make a wild dash for a table at the far end of the room, leaving you alone, or almost alone, what would you do? Dash, too?" "Well, hardly," I laughed. "But you don't seriously mean that this has happened to you?" "Indeed I do. It seems the girls are in the habit of planning to eat refreshments together, no matter where they happen to be at the wind-up of the game. The consequence is that at some tables six or seven have to be served, and at others only two. Of course you can understand that a number of congenial spirits can have a better time all grouped together, but for the few who are left it is mortifying, and unusual; and then it crowds up some parts of the room so that it delays serving badly."

A moment's reflection will tell you why our OVERCOATS are superior to the usual ready-made garment.

If you can't see it from the outside, look at the inside. If you fail to see its superiority there, show it to your wife, or some one's sister; women appreciate the best workmanship in garments.

DRAPING.

No feature of our business has been more appreciated the past year than the Draping Department. One reason is because we have such an abundance of beautiful things that no other store would think of carrying. Another reason is because we understand draping. Our patrons do not find us helpless when something original and artistic is wanted. Copying is not difficult for anybody, we should judge; but copying we leave to others. Originating is our specialty.
